

DISH Network Forges Agreement with Nielsen Media Research

EchoStar Communications Corporation (NASDAQ: DISH) and its DISH Network satellite TV service today announced that it has signed an agreement with Nielsen Media Research for national TV ratings service.

Nielsen, the leading provider of television and audience measurement services, measures the viewing habits of TV homes including DISH Network's estimated 11.4 million customers. The deal will allow DISH Network to use Nielsen Media Research data for marketing, programming and sales research purposes. DISH Network can use the data from Nielsen to guarantee advertisers a specific number of viewers for their advertisements.

"We're committed to delivering an accountable platform for advertisers," said Susan Arnold, vice president of Programming for DISH Network. "This agreement, which allows DISH Network to measure its audience with the same system used by broadcast networks, is just a first step for us."

"We are thrilled to have this new relationship with DISH Network, and that DISH Network recognizes how important audience measurement and research is to their advertisers," said Sara Erichson, general manager of national services for Nielsen Media Research.

Turner Advertising Group, a third party advertising agent for DISH Network, will continue to represent DISH Network's advertising sales initiatives using the new data provided by Nielsen.

"Nielsen's data about DISH Network viewers should be welcome news to advertisers," said Patrick Ivers, president of Turner Advertising Group. "It makes advertisers aware of what they are getting for their money in both traditional
