

DISH Names Martin Lenoir as Vice President of Direct Marketing

Lenoir to lead DISH's direct acquisition initiatives

ENGLEWOOD, Colo.--DISH (Nasdaq: DISH) today announced that Martin Lenoir will lead the satellite-TV provider's direct marketing efforts as vice president of direct marketing. He will report to Chief Marketing Officer, James Moorhead.

For the past twelve years, Lenoir has held increasingly senior marketing roles within the financial services and insurance industries. He brings to DISH a strong direct marketing background and a successful track record of driving customer acquisition.

"As we transform DISH to a consumer-led organization, we needed to strengthen our ability to find and communicate with potential customers," said Moorhead. "Martin brings strong experience in finding prospective customers with a laser focus and he will help DISH acquire pay-TV and broadband consumers now and in the future."

“As we transform DISH to a consumer-led organization, we needed to strengthen our ability to find and communicate with potential customers”

Most recently, Lenoir led direct-to-consumer marketing for the AARP Life Insurance program at New York Life Insurance Company. Before assuming these responsibilities, he led all direct marketing for Kaiser Permanente, helping to prepare the company for the shift to consumer-purchased health insurance.

Prior to these positions, Lenoir led cross-selling efforts and small business acquisition strategy at Capital One.
