

HALOLIFE And Save The Children Launch Partnership To Protect U.S. Children In Need

HALOLIFE+ Campaign Makes Every Breath Count

STEVENSON, Wash., May 11, 2021 /PRNewswire/ -- HALOLIFE is partnering with Save the Children to provide highly effective and form-fitting face masks to help protect U.S. children in need. This partnership comes at a time when millions of children are facing hunger as a result of school-related closures, while their families are facing income challenges and other hardships. While these challenges existed before COVID-19 and COVID related variants, the fight to empower children to reach their full potential has been made that much harder. Through this partnership, HALOLIFE and Save the Children will engage in a campaign called HALOLIFE+, an initiative whereby HALOLIFE will donate 20 percent of mask purchases as well as a donation of masks in support of Save the Children's mission, its staff, volunteers, as well as U.S. children in need.

"Save the Children is very grateful for this partnership with HALOLIFE and their support of our continued efforts to protect children, especially during these uncertain times," said Shane Garver, Save the Children's senior director of rural education.

"In many ways, our missions are aligned in supporting the health and dignity of humankind," stated Keith Anderson, CEO of HALOLIFE. "We continue to explore innovative ways to serve the world with solutions for a healthier life. If we work together, this becomes mission possible."

HALOLIFE, a mission-driven company, was originally formed to help protect people living in Bali and Southeast Asia from toxic volcanic air pollution. When COVID-19 hit, HALOLIFE responded by creating reusable face masks that raise the standard for function (protection), fit, and fashion while also donating masks to frontline workers, the homeless, and children in need. Unlike other masks, HALOmasks are double-layered and have added a nano-filter which screens out 99% of airborne particulates, including COVID-19.
