

More than 600 Visitors Across a Dozen Industries Have Trained for Cyber Attacks at IBM Security's Cyber Range

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., March 10, 2017 /PRNewswire/ -- IBM Security (NYSE: IBM) today announced that more than 600 visitors, representing organizations from a dozen industries, have participated in war-game-like training for cyber-attacks at its X-Force Command Cyber Range. These hundreds of participants experienced how to prepare for and respond to cyber-attacks using live malware and real-world scenarios at the company's Cyber Range.

Officially opened in January, the world's first commercial Cyber Range is helping clients address a critical gap in responding to cyber-attacks. An IBM sponsored study on Cyber Resilience found 75 percent of IT and security professionals surveyed say their organization does not have a modern incident response plan applied across the entire enterprise.

IBM's Cyber Range is part of a $200 million investment the company announced last year expanding its capabilities to help clients respond faster and more effectively to cyber-attacks.
