Ahmed Moussa

General Manager, General Medicines, Sanofi Canada

"At Sanofi Canada, we're committed to going beyond medicine to support the health and well-being of Canadians living with diabetes. Diabetes Care Community is a trusted hub where people living with diabetes seek information regarding their diabetes management. We're proud to collaborate with DCC to support the creation of new resources to help Canadians optimize their emotional well-being and manage their diabetes so they can live life to the fullest."

The Diabetes Canada Clinical Practice Guidelines for the Prevention and Management of Diabetes in Canada acknowledge that research has shown an increasingly clear relationship between diabetes and a variety of mental health issues and state that "Diabetes distress" refers to the negative emotions and burden of self-management related to living with diabetes.¹

A survey conducted among DCC's national community of Canadians living with type 1 and type 2 diabetes revealed that almost 60 per cent of them feel that diabetes has an impact on their emotional well-being at least some of the time, and:

- 40 per cent rate their emotional well-being as "mediocre", "poor", or "very poor" and only 18 per cent rate it as "very good".
- Only 42 per cent feel that they have found the right support and resources to help manage their emotional well-being.
- More than 70 per cent feel it is important to have access to online resources to support their emotional well-being and diabetes management.

Additionally, more than half of respondents recognized keeping blood glucose levels at target, maintaining a healthy diet and physical activity as "very important" factors that contribute to their emotional well-being. Yet, less than 25 per cent ranked themselves as managing these things "very well".

Shelley Diamond

BScPhm, President and Co-founder, Diabetes Care Community Inc.

"The survey results showed that a vast majority of respondents feel that it is important to have access to online resources to support emotional well-being, so we are pleased to be collaborating with Sanofi Canada to help meet this need. Diabetes Care Community and Sanofi Canada share the same commitment to help people with diabetes live life well, and emotional well-being is a critical component of overall health."

Findings from the survey will help inform the development of the new educational content that will be housed under the "emotional well-being" channel on DCC's website.
